Let’s look at each type of straight wager:

Win: Betting to win is probably the easiest wager to understand.

Place: Place betting is a little more conservative than win betting. When you are betting to place, your horse must finish first or second for you to cash the wager.

Show: Show betting is the most conservative of straight betting as you are only betting your horse will finish in the first, second, or third.

While straight wagering is easy to do and understand, exotic wagering can be a little more challenging. Punters flock to exotic wagers because their potential payoffs are high for a small investment.

Quinnella: Quinnella betting is choosing the first two finishers of a race regardless of order. The payoff is the same regardless of which order they come in.

Trifecta: Trifecta is a bet where you have to pick first, second and third in a race in the correct order. This is not an easy wager to get right.

Superfecta: Superfecta betting is extremely popular among horse racing bettors. It is a wager on which horses will finish a race in first, second, third, and fourth.
